Rhymes of the Season. Now tulip gay and daffodil With sweet perfume the air do fill. And buttercops and daisies white Will fill our souls with pure delight-Bright butterflies and honey bees Will sport among the Cowers and trees. The birds will carol forth sweet notes, Lovers' sail on the lake in boats. With Summer's sun's hot scorehing rays We'll in the country spend our days. Go to the Central Park for air. But Central Park "won't" take the Fair!

Epitaph on a Dog. The Summer sun in a golden glow was sink-ing in the West. And all the air seemed hushed and sad as we laid poor shep to rest. In a quiet, shady valler where the soft winds gently blow We sadly laid his body where sweet Summer We sadly laid his body where sweet Summer flowers grow.
One last fond look at the dear old form, and we left him there slone.
Mid the green clad hills and forest glades, where in life he loved to roam.
No tombstone marks his lonely grave, no poet his praises sing.
But the memory of his noble deeds to our hearts will ever cling.
Then lare thee well thou dear old friend, we bid thee a last adies.
Few nobler lives have ever lived, faw friends have been more true.

Sell Not Thyself for Gold. Though this wicked world bring trouble

And miseries untold.

Trust to the winding ways of fate,
Sell not thyself for gold. Though dark the cloud hangs o'er thee.

Though all thy friends desert thes And the tempter seems most bold. Take courage, friend, and persevere. Sell not thy self for gold. J. McC.

Decidedly Future. In mighty faith New Yorkers gaze, With eager sight and keen. Down vistas long of future days And see their streets are clean.

Ten thousand years, at least, must flow In series swift, serene. Ere wond'ring strangers home can go And say our streets are clean. Perchance some lone New Yorker may In l'aradise be seen;
But he would never want to stay
Where any streets were clean.

Those Little Shoes. One night as I looked through an old oak cliest.
Filled with treasures antique and rare, found two little red woollen socks.
And of shoes a very much trodden pair. Gather the sandals of Eastern climes.
Trimmed with gems of the Southern Sea
That sparkle and glow like sun-kiesed dew lint these are dearer far to me.

Mr. Abud was comparatively dumb on the subject of Miss Mary Anderson. He said that Americans knew a great deal more about her than he did. She was in Italy at the pre-sent time, and he had not met her personally since she left America. He had seen a great deal of Dr. Hamiton Griffin. Of general news Mr. Abud was more liberal. Nat Occodwin, he said, would open July 21 at the Gaiety Theatre. Miss Lois Fuller was now the understudy of Miss Nellie Farren at the Gaiety Theatre, and the arrangement was extremely agreeable to all parties. Miss Minnis Falmer did a large business at the Grand Theatre, but her matinees of My Brother's Sister at another theatre had been less successful. Mr. Abud will probably return to England next Saturday.
